View source: R/arrange.r This function completes the subsetting, transforming and ordering triad with a function that works in a similar way to subset and transform but for reordering a data frame by its columns. This saves a lot of typing! Usage arrange(df, ...) Arguments df data frame to reorder ... expressions evaluated in the context of df and then fed to order See Also order for sorting function in the base package Examples # sort mtcars data by cylinder and displacement mtcars[with(mtcars, order(cyl, disp)), ] # Same result using arrange: no need to use with(), as the context is implicit # NOTE: plyr functions do NOT preserve row.names arrange(mtcars, cyl, disp) # Let's keep the row.names in this example myCars = cbind(vehicle=row.names(mtcars), mtcars) arrange(myCars, cyl, disp) # Sort with displacement in descending order arrange(myCars, cyl, desc(disp)) plyr documentation built on March 25, 2022, 1:05 a.m. arrange | order | As verbs the difference between arrange and order is that arrange is to set up, to organize, especially in a positive manner while order is to set in some sort of order. To arrange numbers in any order, we first need to compare them. First Compare, then Order Arranging numbers in ascending order: Count the number of digits in each number. The number with the least number of digits is the smallest. Write it first.  Continue this till all the numbers left for comparison have the same number of digits.For the numbers having the same number of digits, start with comparing the numbers from the leftmost digit. Write the number with the smallest digit.If the leftmost digits are same, move to the digits to the right and compare them. Write the number with smaller digit.Continue doing this with the remaining numbers till we arrange all the numbers.  Example: Arrange 22554, 231, 22, 245, 22354 in ascending order. The number 22 has the least number of digits. So, write it first as it is the smallest number. Next, 231 and 245 both are 3-digit numbers. They both have 2 at hundreds place. So, we move to the digit to the right. Compare 231 and 245 Since, 3 < 4; So, 231 < 245 Next, compare 22554 and 22354 as both have 5 digits. On comparing, 22554 and 22354, we find 3 < 5 So, 22354 < 22554 We can then also arrange the numbers on the number line as shown: Ordering Fractions in Ascending Order Ordering fractions with same denominators For the fractions having the same denominator, the fraction with the smallest numerator is the smallest.  Example: Arrange 3⁄7 , 2⁄7 , 5⁄7 , 1⁄7 in ascending order. Comparing the numerators, we get 1 < 2 < 3 < 5 Therefore, 1⁄7
